Assassination at Caire.

CAIRO, July 30 -The murder of Ex Chief-Police Charles D. Arter by Constable John logan, in this city, about six o'clock this evening, causes much excitement. Both were old citizens and until recently, at least, were warm friends. The causes that led to the commission of the crime it is now impossible to ascertain. Arter when shot was sitting in the door of Gates's saloon, on Com-nercial street, watching some workmen put down a flagstone pavement. Hogan entered the saloon, took a drink, walked back into the rear part of the hall, and then retraced his steps until he arrived where his victim was sitting, when he drew a revolver and fired, the ball entering Arter's back, passing through, and lodged under the right brastbone. When shot Arter sprang from the chair on to the pavement, and grasping hold of a gentleman, who stood near, pulled him into a stairway entrance and closed the door, and then sank back on the stairway. Hogan tried to shoot a second time, but the cartridge failed to explode, and before a third attempt could be made he was grasped by the bystanders, turned over to the authorities and taken to jail. Arter lived about five minutes.

To-mornow I shall lay the whole situation before the police commissioners, and be governed in any future actions as to the case in hand by what is determined upon in their official capacity as custodians of the city's interests. I know what ought to be done in this matter, and, I hand be sued on my bond for the chirch, that there would be the church next Sunday, but the church next Sunday, but the the services would be held on the camp grounds. Mr. Hamlin then rose from his seat, stated that the meeting would be held in the church and not on the ground, then pronounced the benediction. The two men todians of the city's interests. I know what ought to be done in this matter, and, I ought to be done in this matter, and, I tion about some wood, saying that Weaver "might as well have stolen it." Being highly incensed at this, Weaver struck Hamlin in the face, knocking him down. This was followed by a general stampede and great con-fusion among the ladies, and before this out-break was quieted Weaver had knocked the superintendent down again. At this a young man named Charles Golden interfered, and trees and evergreens, with its beautiful fountain, serves as lungs for the city. It is the easiest drained city in the world, as it may be said to be surrounded by running streams, viz. The Mississippi on the west, Wolf river on the north, and Bayou Gayoso on the east, not to mention Nonconnah creek, a few miles to the south. The majority of the dwellings settled and Weaver was fined by Squire Porter for desecrating the Lord's house. The high standing of the men in the church makes the affair one to be regretted, the more so because their wrath was not withheld till the open air was reached. Mr. Hamlin hardly resented the blows received, and the
